VOL III

WILL JAMESON

Will is Gabe's best friend, and they've known each other for years. Originally set up by mutual friends on a blind date when Gabe first moved to the city, they had an instant connection but soon realized they worked better as friends instead of boyfriends.

Will was a particularly scrawny child, and in his adult life has taken up bodybuilding as a hobby. He works as a nurse at the local hospital.

Will is painfully shy, especially around men he finds attractive. He has a huge crush on Graham, a guy who works at the local coffee shop, but he hasn't been able to work up the nerve to ask Graham out.

INCUBI

Within the world of Not Your Average Demon, Incubi are a class of demon who hail from the realm of Volocarn, the Demonic Domain of Lust, and answer to Lord Azmodel, a Greater Incubus himself.

Incubi have several powers at their disposal in order to best please their partner. Most Incubi have the ability to shape shift, use glamours, or produce clothing at will. Greater Incubi, Like Lord Azmodel or his sons, also have the ability to induce restful sleep, pleasant dreams, soothe pain, and produce a greater variety of objects as they need.

All Incubi are limited by the energy they have stored within their bodies. Incubi feed on the energy created by sexual thoughts, desires, and actions with sexual thoughts being the least nourishing, and actions being the most fulfilling. Incubi can freely feed off of sexual thoughts and desires but require explicit consent in order to engage in sexual activity with a partner.

Incubi are largely a fun-loving species of demon, and generally good-natured as a rule. They form contracts with willing mortals to collect souls for their realm.

CONTRACTS

Demons form contracts with willing mortals in order to procure souls for their respective domains. Only the most powerful demons are procreation in the same manner as humans. Most demons are born from human souls that were acquired through contracts, though not every soul is strong enough to withstand the transformation. Some fade away into shades, stronger souls become new demons, though they never retain any memory of their human life.

Contracts are tricky pieces of old demonic magic and are subject to very strict rules.

Despite many mortal misconceptions, there is no ritual needed to summon a demon. This is simply a misconception that has grown over centuries of storytelling and rumors. The only action a mortal actually has to take is to state their sincere desire for a specific kind of demon. If their request is genuine, a contract will form and reach out to any appropriate demon who is available to take the contract. Once a demon accepts the newly formed contract, they are able to appear to the mortal summoner.

In the event the mortal changes their mind or declines the terms of the contract, the demon will leave and the contract will fade, erasing the memory of the encounter completely.

Contracts can be transferred to another willing mortal if the demon consents to the transfer. Unfortunately, doing so renders the contract unstable and changes the terms.

When demons first created the contract magic, a compromise was struck with the Celestials to define the terms; should a mortal willingly take a contract from another mortal it becomes an act of sacrifice, which binds the demon and the mortal into the contract and negates the ability to break the contract through any means other than fulfillment or the contracted demon destroying the contract. However, should the demon destroy the contract without fulfilling it first, the demon will be stripped of its powers and reduced to a demonic beast; a fate most demons consider worse than being destroyed completely.
